Accessories With timeless Charm

In the 3rd century B.C., the fan was recognized as a symbol of power in China. Hieroglyphs and bas-reliefs from ancient Egypt also made use of them. The fan was introduced into the Roman Empire and became a popular accessory. Its first great moment of fame was as early as 1200, when it was used by the Medici when she married Henry. It was better ahead of its time, it became a symbol of nobility in court. In the meantime, new styles of folding fans were invented in Japan, and the Chinese, also found their way into Europe. When fans are made from rice paper and bamboo sticks in the Orient, on this side of the world they have been reinvented in metals or fine woods, with embellishments of exotic feathers and gemstones that reveal their luxury.

Elegance and fashion intertwine

Milan is reborn each morning, pulsing like a heartbeat. In the vast, majestic station—an ancient temple amid the chaos—swarms of faces, each telling stories of distant worlds, pour into the vibrant Babylon of glittering skyscrapers; in the delicate grandeur of the Duomo, a glacier of white and pink marble, crowned with a thousand peaks.

BW 1181 SERIES

Ingeniously crafted, creating a visual focal point.

A trendsetter ahead of its time, the folding fan became a must-have for European nobility in court. In the meantime, new trade routes meant that the folding fans, invented in Japan and then popularized in China, also found their way into Europe.

Whereas fans in the Orient are made from rice paper and bamboo sticks, on this side of the world they have been reinvented in metals or fine woods, with embellishments of exotic feathers and gemstones that reveal their luxury.

As early as the 7th century B.C., the fan was recognized as a symbol of prestige in China. Hieroglyphs and bas-reliefs testify that the ancient Egyptians also made use of them. From here, the timeless fan flows into the Roman Empire and into the Middle Ages. The fan enjoyed its first great moment of glory in the Renaissance. Popular in Italy as early as 1200, it was imported to France by Catherine de' Medici when she married Henry of Valois in 1533. A trendsetter ahead of its time, it became a must-have for European nobility in court. In the meantime, new trade routes meant that the folding fans invented in Japan, and then popularized in China, also found their way into Europe. Whereas fans are made from rice paper and bamboo sticks in the Orient, on this side of the world they have been reinvented in metals or fine woods, with embellishments of exotic feathers and gemstones that reveal their luxury.
